

NADIES[®] ILLUSTRATED

9
STAYCATIONS!
WHERE TO GO,
WHAT TO DO

DREAM MACHINES
BEST AMERICAN-MADE
COLLECTIBLE CARS

SUPER MEN

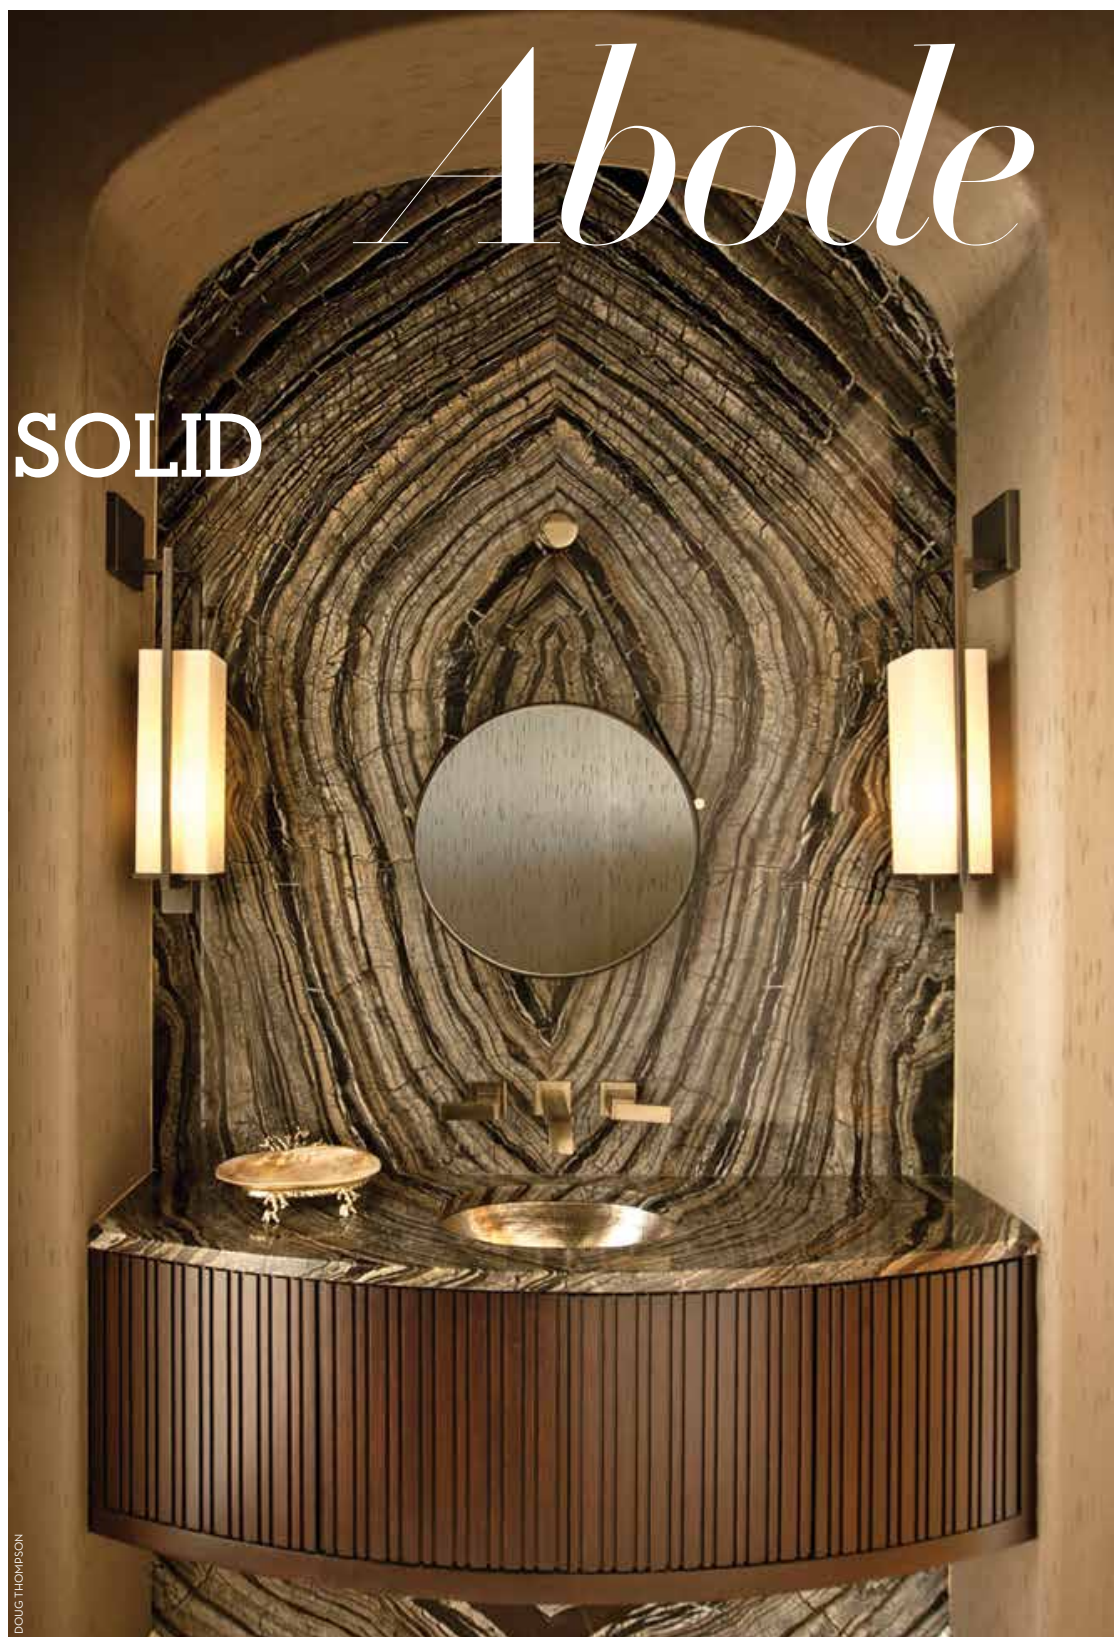

Man's best friend with this year's men of the moment

KYLE RAMBOSK

Abode

ROCK SOLID

More durable than granite and more visually striking than quartz, quartzite is emerging as the material of choice in kitchen and bath design. Designer Renée Gaddis was ahead of the trend with the design of this powder room in a private estate in Mediterra. To form the vanity feature wall, Gaddis book-matched two slabs of Illusion Blue quartzite with veining so intricate it resembles petrified wood. For visual continuity, the same material was used on the floating vanity countertop. The effect is dramatic, yet open to interpretation. "Everyone sees something different," Gaddis says, "making the space personal to whoever is in it." Renée Gaddis Interiors, Naples (239-431-8352, reneegaddis.com)

DOUG THOMPSON